Between 10 and 11pm on October 16th, I was driving home from Wal-Mart and I found this female doggie shivering in the middle of the dark roads. I drove around the neighborhood for an hour with the pup in my car and couldn't find the owners nor anyone searching for her. It was in the 30s last night so I took her in, gave her water/food/dental treats/foamless shampoo scrub and some front line and cuddled, kept her warm in a nice warm bed. She's friendly, nice to my 2 cats and 1 dog and is a small female tan dog. I don't know the breed or well the mix, and she looks like she's recently been pregnant but that's just me guestimating. I don't know how long shes been out for but she has some wear and tear on her paws, so I'm letting her rest warmly and safely in my home. I had my roomate today drive around the same area I found her last night, but no one was looking nor any mention. I'll keep checking around our area and keeping her safe.
